

GALINA ZELENINA (Moscow)

PhD in History, associate professor Center of Religious Studies at Russia's Humanitarian University, lecturer at the Department of Jewish Studies at Moscow State University, editor of Booknik.ru – Jewish texts and issues

Should someone take a closer look at people somehow connected to Room 808 in the building that houses Russia's Academy of Sciences (the Sefer Offices) they will find a wonderful micro-historical case-study or almost a family saga. Sefer with its training courses, seasonal schools, conferences and publishing efforts is the central address for life to everyone of us – and not only for those who have pursued academic Jewish studies as a profession.

Sefer is a vibrant organization, producing a network of communication and social environment that is both unchangeable and, at the same time, in constant development. One day in Moscow, when not only social but academic advertising will emerge, a blue and gold poster will hang across the large expanse of Leninsky Prospect that reads, "SEFER IS A WAY OF LIFE!"
